The Institute of Museum and Library Services (IMLS), an agency of the federal government, collects public library data nationally every year. As part of this process, the IMLS requires the NH State Library to collect the same data from all public libraries in NH that is being collected in every other state. They use this data to better understand library programs and services, and to see how our libraries compare to those in other states.

All public libraries in the US are required to report data in the same way so that the numbers are meaningful and comparable.

As Library Director, I gather and report numbers as required by IMLS and NH state law, RSA 202-A:12 (g).
